

NEW COSMETIC TREATMENT ?

Paul Keetley, Managing Director, Enlightened Therapies

How is it that some people, with a minimum of obvious cosmetic interventions, seem to radiate natural beauty? What is the source of their well-being and glowing appearance? Can it be because of their genetic heritage, or perhaps their nutritional upbringing, or some other determinant? One thing we can say for certain about naturally beautiful people is that their nervous systems seem to be working well.

In Russia, some twenty years ago, scientists were charged with the responsibility: to come up with a universal therapy that would need to be simple, natural, non-intrusive and very broadly applicable. That therapy, called SCENAR, was essentially about finding and treating 'asymmetries' of the internal nervous systems. Today SCENAR is a widely used medical modality. SCENAR's amazing effectiveness is now also being utilized by cosmetic health practitioners around the World.

The Skin.

By far the largest organ of the body, our skin contains nerve cells of various sorts that represent the tissues, muscles, fats, bones, organs and functions underneath. The skin will often bear witness to some systemic disorder. Russian scientists investigating the electro-magnetic qualities of tissue and nerves found they were able to discern that healthy tissues and nerves exhibited 'symmetrical' qualities, whilst unhealthy, diseased and dysfunctional tissues and nerves exhibited 'asymmetrical' qualities. Furthermore they found that 'asymmetry' could be detected trans-dermally, (via the skin). By assessing the nature of these emissions through the skin it became apparent that asymmetrical signals were responsive to input with changes being registered by interventions as simple as massage. In effect, an interactive dialogue could be manifested and measured between these asymmetrical zones and points and the therapist or therapy being used.

These Russian scientists discovered that asymmetrical points were both discernable and responsive to intervention. They conceived the idea of creating a bio-feedback loop in conjunction with electro-stimulation, aiming to reinvigorate the points and zones from asymmetry back into symmetry. In effect, this new intervention would attempt to restart or rejuvenate the body's own healing responses back to normal in that area. The whole body, via the skin, was to be prompted to look after itself so that no other interventions might be needed.

The rest, as they say, is history. A innovative new therapy of Electro-Neuro- Adaptive-Regulation was created. This new SCENAR therapy went on to become a mainstream medical modality in Russia. The inventors received a Lenin prize and now thousands of devices are in widespread use there. Today it is also possible in Australia to get SC/ENAR therapy in Australia and we are also discovering how beneficially cosmetic are some of its uses.

Cosmeticians are experimenting with ENAR for Face-Lift treatments, for Weight Loss, and for Energy Revitalisation and for much, much more. Since ENAR therapy is completely safe (the only real contraindication is with heart pacemakers) there are no limits to the range of areas and ailments that can be specifically treated. Digestive improvement, scarring reduction, stretch marks (when new), as well as general toning of the nervous system as a whole, the basis of all health and beauty, are ENAR therapy subjects with a resulting byproduct of cosmetology.

The therapist simply finds the effected area using ENAR techniques and applies the device directly to the skin. Be it superficial or systemic the ENAR goes to work via its uniquely patented bio-feedback interactive stimulation process and restarts the normal nervous system functions associated with these areas. The newly re-balanced points, cleared of resistance, go into optimum function naturally. The flow of energy is restored and wellness and natural beauty is enhanced as a byproduct.
